'The Historical Review was spurred on by the understanding that many of the people who are central to its formation, growth and success are aging and beginning to fall back from their involvement. Along with the loss of their volunteer time and skills, the Society is also aware that it is beginning to lose its corporate memory and operational experience. Using the excellent memory of one charter member, Jean Scott, backed up with other Society members' recollections, the Society sought to identify both those qualities that make a great volunteer, and the way in which they can be recruited, trained and maintained, in order to provide information in order to help the Society plan for continuity and successors.'
